Romance – Then and Now. Carrie Sessarego, geekgirlinlove.com blogger, will talk about the history of romance as a genre, from the medieval era in which "romances" were adventure stories, to today when romance novels are a billion dollar industry. We'll talk about how romance changed from the 1970's to today and how different social movements affect the genre. Finally, we'll discuss the many subgenres that exist, including contemporary, science fiction, fantasy, paranormal, and historical! Handouts will include a list of book recommendations from Jane Austen to current authors.

The Art of Frankenstein – Revisiting a Timeless Classic. In 1818, Mary Shelley crafted one of history's greatest literacy achievements. Two hundred years later, local artist Stephanie Taylor has created a new interpretation of Shelley's Frankenstein, bringing her own vision to the story. Taylor's illustrations have been published within the original work in a limited edition run from the I Street Press. She and Carrie Sessarego will discuss it all in a special library program. A 15-minute Q & A will follow each hour-long discussion.
